

The Safe Home: Designing for Safety in the Home
by Lisa Bonneville, FASID

One of the primary responsibilities of the professional interior designer is to create “safe homes” for their clients—homes that effectively address health safety, safety from injury and preservation of security. This commitment is a critical component in the relationship between client and designer, and one the designer is uniquely qualified to achieve.

Includes a “project binder” section with sample maintenance and cleaning schedules, as well as an extensive resource list.

Healing Homes: Design to Promote Recovery and Well Being

Five interior designers and an occupational therapist share their insights and expertise on designing environments that promote healing for home care patients. Topics covered include environments for longer term recovery and care, design for providing home health care, lighting for wellness, health and indoor air quality, and creating accessible homes to relieve stress and reduce caregiver burden.
